BRITISH CENSOR STOPS WIRELESS TO U.S. CONSUL

German Consulate Here Not Allowed to Send Message to American Samoa Official

British censorship in Apia, Samoa, has halted an official message from Honolulu to the American consul dealing with a German subject.

On the Sierra there arrived here, en route to the coast, a German woman. a Mrs. Zieschank. She visited German Consul Rodiek and told him of difficulties she and her husband had had in Samoa, after the British occupled it. They were residents there and her husband has been held a virtual prisoner. Recently he was told he would be allowed to go home, she informed the consul, presumably because he is a surgeon and his services would be available not for fighting but for medical aid. But the matter of the route he would take was not settled and his wife, it was decided, should precede him to the States.

She consulted with the consul here so that he might wireless to Samoa, find out what route her husband would be allowed to take home, and arrange to notify her in San Francisco.

Consul Rodlek thereupon sent the following message by Mutual wire-

"Honolulu, May 23.-To American consul, Apia: Telegraph direct German consulate San Francisco which route Zieschang will take.

"GERMAN COUSUL." This morning the consulate here received the following from the Mutual Telephone Company

"Apia, Samoa, to German consul, Honolulu: Your message of the 23rd to American consul Apia was stopped by censor at Apla, Samoa, and instructions given to us to return this message to sender."

Mrs. Zieschan't said that the British authorities tried to force her to take a British ship home, via London, but that she refused to do so, insisting on the American line.

Kona declare that newspapers could be read by the reflection from the blazing lava high up on the mountain. The first news of the outbreak was received in Hilo late on Sunday night and it caused much excitement. Telephone messages on Monday morning gave more particulars and, as the day went on, the despatches told of the lava making its way down the mountain towards the government road. At first there was only one stream to be seen but about 9 o'clock in the morning a message came to the effect that main stream of lava had forked and there were now two flows making their way in a southwesterly direction toward the sea. The flows were reported to be coming down the 1868 and 1887 flows, and the sight Road Doomed.

The best piece of road on the

the-island trip, that between Kahuku ranch and Papa, was expected to be wiped out within a few nours. Then the lava was about eight fro mthe road and making its way downward at a rapid rate of At first the lava came along an hour. It then slowed down to at five miles an hour and later on struck a much slower gait.

The lava came steadily along. Nothing could stop it and, when a small guich was met, the liquid rock simply filled the bllow and then started to low down hill again. The smoke, steam and flames from the molten mass presented a wonderful and magnifcent eight and the people of Kau and Kona sat up all night watching

Lava Rushed Down.
On Monday morning the lava was dnly to be seen as it wended its way down the mountain side. It reembled a huge amount of molten iron which had been spilt from a giant bucket. In places it glowed red-hot and in others it was darker but still showing signs of fire. As the lower strata of the lava cooled the newer lot thrown out of the vent poured over it and continued its journey toward the sea.

KAHULUI HARBOR TERMED DANGEROUS. That the harbor at Kahului, Maui, has become shallow through rapid filling so as to be dangerous to vessels arriving and departing from there was pointed out today by Chairman Charles R. Forbes at the meeting of the harbor board.

Forbes declared that conditions have reached a state where delay is dangerous to vessels and urged clearing out the harbor if possible under

"If a vessel should have to pull out on account of rough weather. it would be put in a dangerous plight," he said, J. E. Sheedy of the Inter-Island Steam Navigation Company said he had measured the harbor and that he considered 6000 yards' excavation would be sufficient. This would necessitate an expenditure of about $1800 at On motion by T. M. Church, passed by the board, the chairman was authorized to prepare plans and specifications for the work with a view to calling for bids. Detailed bids on enginering instruments were opened from three local companies, the Hawaiian News, Arleigh & Co. and Wall-Nichols Company They were referred to the chairman of the board. Upon motion of Commissioner McClellan the Inter-Island Company was authorized to construct a derrick at Pelekunu on the island of Molokai at a cost of labor and materials, plus a commission of 15 per cent.
